Casa D'Annunzio, Sorrento Casa D'Annunzio is a Neoclassical villa in the town of Sorrento, Italy. It is located close to the Porto Bello area and the fishing town of Santa Maria di Castellabate. The building was a country house built for Count Annunzio, the first prime minister of Italy. It was a residence in Sorrento until the mid 1930s. The building was the site of a clash between William Randolph Hearst and his local rival, the New York American journalist H. L. Mencken in October 1925, when Hearst accused Mencken of insulting him in writing an article about Italy. The villa is included in the National Register of Historic Places.
